

Berks Art Alliance Presents

Still Life for Plein Air Painters

With Nancy Tankersley

April 1-3, 2022
Warehouse Studio

- How is a vase like a farm silo?

- How do you create a visual path in a painting?

Designed for the plein air painter who doesn't want to paint in extreme weather, this class will help students see that they don't need to wait for pleasant days to practice their outdoor painting skills. Landscape paintings and still life have much in common as they are both opportunities to study shape and light. Students will set up and paint still life in a way that can replicate conditions that one might see outdoors. Students should have some experience with their medium but do not need to be experienced plein air painters. Through daily demos, lecture and painting exercises, I will show how the principles that apply to painting the landscape can help make one a better painter of any subject. Through careful analysis of each situation, students will learn to start slow but finish fast! Students will paint a different set up each day.

This is a workshop about universal painting principles and not about technique in any one medium. I will demonstrate in oil but acrylic and pastel are also allowed.

- All participants are required to show proof of Covid-19 vaccination and wear masks throughout
